

Mass production era

(early Showa to present)

From around 1935, machines installed in woodworker factories were electrified, and simple hand-push type article-processing machines became popular, leading to the mass production piece bases. The wooden bases were then passed to the hands of many side workers through retail wholesalers to be made into products.